RELIGIOUS

The prayer meetings at the Methodist church are being held Wednesday evenings in the Sunday School auditorium.

The Rev. Dr. Whaling, of Louisville, will occupy the pulpit at the Presbyterian church for the Sunday morning service.

The Church of the Nazarene begins a series of revival meetings on Sunday. The Rev. Montgomery, of Texas, is the evangelist. The church throughout the world is starting revivals simultaneously in the month of January. An unheard-of drive for souls is launched in more than a thousand churches this month. Let every true Christian pray for the salvation of the lost.—Rev. F. E. Hill.

THE SICK

J. Will Clay who has been very ill for the past three weeks, is improving.

There are many beautiful passages in the Scriptures, but somehow or other you can't think of them when you pound your thumb with a hammer.

Love is the life of hope, while hopefulness is but the happiness of love.

Of course nobody cares anything about it, but we wonder if the K. K. K. wear those hoods and shrouds when they fight among themselves.

To have a good friend is one of the highest delights of life; to be a good friend is one of the noblest and most difficult undertakings.

PROPERLY STORED SEED BOOSTS YIELD OF CORN

Proper storage of fall selected seed corn is of greater importance in boosting the corn yields on Kentucky farms than the careful selection of it in the field, specialists on the crop say. Experimental results cited by Ralph Kenney, crops extension specialist at the College of Agriculture in pointing out the value of proper storage, show that seed which was given proper care during the winter months produced yields which were 12 to 27 per cent higher than did seed which was improperly stored.

In the experiment, 400 ears were divided into two equal lots, one lot being well cared for and the other placed in a barn where corn is ordinarily cribbed. The seed which was properly stored produced yields 12 per cent higher on poor soil than did the seed which was stored in the barn, while the yields from the properly stored seed were 27 per cent higher on good soil than were those of the improperly stored seed. These results were obtained in spite of the fact that both lots of seed had germinated equally well.

The farm kitchen and furnace room probably are the best places to store small amounts of seed while it is being dried out. An attic which can be ventilated, which has a chimney passing through it or which is located directly over a heated room so that it can be kept at a fairly uniform temperature, is a good place to cure corn. Other places which can be used to an advantage are a special corn curing house, a heated spare room, the tool or wagon shed or any dry and well ventilated building. By using some of the simple hanging devices, farmers should have little difficulty in properly curing the seed for their next year's crop, the specialists say.

After it has remained in one of the suggested places for about two months, the seed should be "dry as bone" and contain less than 10 per cent of moisture. In this condition, it is free from any danger of being damaged by freezing during the remainder of the winter. The seed may be allowed to remain in these places or it can be stored in mouse-proof barrels, boxes or crates until time for planting. The important point to remember is that the seed will be injured if it is exposed to a damp atmosphere in which it absorbs moisture.

Real progress is dependent, even more in the home than anywhere else upon not only material but also spiritual advancement. It is not enough to show a woman how to make better bread or to induce her to lighten her work by use of a fireless cooker or some other labor-saving device if we have not at the same time helped to give her a larger view of life as a whole and some opportunities for desirable recreation and pleasure.—Miss Margaret Whittemore, state leader of home demonstration agents, College of Agriculture.

Great souls make their luck to their liking, while small souls wait for lardy fortune.

The wheels of the new year are turning and at this hour all eyes are turned toward the future. What does she hide in the clouds that mantle her? Is it storm or sunshine? Whatever it be, may we be given grace, by the changeless Lord of passing years, to meet it with an unconquerable soul, and with the faith that "God is on the field when He is most invisible."

Let us walk softly, friend;
For strange paths lie before us all untrod;
The New Year, spotless from the hand of God,
Is thine and mine, O friend!

Let us walk straight, friend;
Forget the crooked paths behind us now,
Press on with steeper purpose on our brow,
To better deeds, O friend!

Let us walk kindly, friend;
We cannot tell how long this life shall last,
How soon these precious years be overpast,
Let love walk with us, friend.

It is said that the late Dan Hanna was planning to marry for the fifth time when death overtook him. If the man lived to a green old age, when finally he reached the other side he might have said to Solomon: "I had as many wives as you had and one at a time."

A woman often wonders why her husband never demonstrates any of the passionate kisses that she reads about in the novel. Maybe he does, when it is with one of the beautiful affinities that she also reads about in the novels.

Anyway, an amateur aviator can hit the ground just as hard as a professional.

Chicago reformers are planning a national "Purity Week," when all who pledge themselves to walk the straight and narrow path will wear lilies. Lilies are usually worn on one's final appearance in this world, and it is only then that reform pledges are really safe.

We know a man who says that if a married man wants to be as happy as a bachelor he must behave himself as well.

Walter Little claims that he goes to the movies to rest his feet, but Charlie Eveland says he goes to practice reading aloud.
